Submission of Material for Publication

Members and non-members are welcome to submit material for publication in Muscogiana. All material must be typed on 8 ½ by 11 white paper. Bible records are to be submitted with a photocopy of the title page showing date of publication, the pertinent entries, a typed transcription of the entries exactly as they appear in the Bible, and a notarized statement as to the present owner. To be considered for publication, material must be of historical and/or genealogical significance to the Columbus/Original Muscogee County, Georgia, area that consists of Harris County, Talbot County, Marion County, Chattahoochee County, and current Muscogee County. Final decisions on the acceptance of material for publication are made by the Editor and the Editorial Board. The Muscogee Genealogical Society cannot accept responsibility for errors or inaccuracies in material submitted for publication.

Queries

Queries are welcome from members and non-members. Queries are limited to one per issue. There are no charges for queries.

From the Editor's Desk

The historical and genealogical study of the people of Original Muscogee County is the purpose of this journal and our Society. In this issue we present examinations of two differing sets of historical experiences in Muscogee County. One, that of the antebellum planter-lawyer elite as reflected in the life of Henry Lewis Benning, and the other, that of cotton mill village life in the 20th century as experienced by Minnie Clyde Balkcom.

For a broader understanding of this county's past both types of experiences need study. Historians (and novelists) have generally written more thoroughly about the leading political, social, and business people than about those less prominent. But in the last few decades historians have begun to study the lives of working people and their families, a good example being that by Jacquelyn Dowd Hall and others, Like a Family: The Making of a Southern Cotton Mill World (Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1987). Carolyn Smith's account of Minnie Clyde Balkcom's life in Bibb City and the review of a new biography of Henry Lewis Benning by Craig Lloyd allow the reader a glimpse of both slices of area life.

This issue continues the series on Bethel Baptist Church where both owner and slave members were subject to the same discipline; the Talbot County brides index, and the records of Riverdale Cemetery in Columbus. As always, members and non-members are invited to propose and submit material for publication in the journal.

Finally, the editor is pleased to report that in the contest sponsored this spring by the Ellen Payne Odom Genealogy Library of Moultrie, Georgia, Muscogiana won second place in the genealogical society magazine category. This standing was due to the quality of articles by our contributors and the excellent word processing and indexing by our typist, Kimberly Casleton. Thanks also to the members of the Society for your strong support of the journal.

MINNIE CLYDE BALKCOM AND THE BIBB CITY EXPERIENCE, 1936-1998

By

Carolyn Smith

The longtime place of employment for Minnie Clyde Balkcom and her husband, Daniel Webster Balkcom, was the mill located at a once rural site north of Columbus, Georgia. The mill began in 1876 by Hugh Moss Comer, a cotton merchant from Savannah and Major John F. Hanson, a Macon cotton merchant. Together they founded the Bibb Manufacturing Company. In 1878, Comer and Hanson got two more stockholders, Francis Muir and Joseph B. Duckworth, and accumulated a second mill called the Macon Manufacturing Company. An aggressive step for expansion was taken in 1898, resulting in four new mills at Porterdale, Macon, Cordele, and Reynolds, Georgia.¹ Innovations were brought to the mill located in the Columbus area. The Columbus Power Company, whose leaders were H. H. Comer, Gunby Jordan, J. F. Hanson, John Hill and H. M. Comer, completed the North Highlands dam on the Chattahoochee River in 1902. H.M. Comer and John Hill both died prior to its operation.² This dam was the first in the country to be a power source for lighting an industrial plant miles away. Of the two plants it powered, the Bibb mill was one of them.³

When H. M. Comer died in 1900, his co-founder, Major J. F. Hanson, moved up to the President's position. Hanson purchased the land and the dam site of the Columbus Power Company along the Chattahoochee River and built a 25,000-spindle mill for making sewing thread. When Hanson died in 1909, Gunby Jordan took his place and added a weave shed in 1911. Edward T. Comer, H. M. Comer's youngest brother, held the position of the company presidency from 1913 until he was named chairman of the board in 1919.⁴ E. T. Comer's slogan was, "Keep on keeping on." He was also regarded as one of the best business men in the south.⁵ William D. Anderson then took the reigns of leadership in the mill. He was a salesman by trade and kept things going through the depression. Anderson was president during World War II, when the Bibb mill was Georgia's largest war industry. At that time, 98 percent of its output went for military items.⁶ It was during Anderson's presidency that Minnie Clyde and her husband, Webster, made their decision to work at the mill in 1936.

Minnie Clyde Trawick was born December 21, 1916, in Geneva County, Alabama. At age sixteen she finished the ninth grade and married Daniel Webster Balkcom a year later in June, 1934. Webster's family owned a farm and because cotton wasn't picked until August, he sawed logs to raise enough money to marry Minnie Clyde. They lived in a one room "honeymoon" cabin on the Balkcom family's property. All they owned was a mattress and frame, a chest and four straight chairs. Webster's uncle made them a table and they bought a stove on credit. Their first child, Yvonne, was born a year after they wed. Minnie Clyde and Webster had to get a cow and an ice cooler to provide milk for the baby. While living on the farm they grew cotton, corn, peanuts and they grew their own food.⁷ Because the Balkcom family did not own a tractor, a mule and plow were used in the fields. Minnie Clyde vividly remembers the day when her husband returned from the fields, threw his hat aside and exclaimed "Well, the mule's dead, I guess we'll have to do something else now." The loss of their mule put the Balkcoms in a difficult position. This was because they borrowed money each year to adequately run the farm and now had no means to tend to the crops. Without a crop at the end of the growing season, the Balkcoms would be left unable to repay their loan. Estelle and Clifton Thomas, Minnie Clyde's sister and brother-in-law, were employed at the Bibb mill and living in Bibb City. They suggested that Webster come to Columbus and apply at the mill. The mill had no employment office and all aspiring workers applied in person. As the applicants waited in line, those who did the hiring would watch to see who would tire and sit while waiting. If someone sat, they were less likely to get hired than a person who stood. Their reasoning was that those who tired quickly waiting in line would tire quickly working in the mill. Webster stood for his entire wait.⁸

In 1936 Webster gained employment at Bibb Manufacturing Company and moved his family from Geneva County, Alabama, to Bibb City in Muscogee County, Georgia. Minnie Clyde and Yvonne stayed on the farm two months longer than Webster so the hogs could gain more weight prior to selling. This would ensure the family more money to repay their loan.⁹

The town of Bibb City was founded in 1903 and completed in 1909. It always had its own governing body which consisted of one mayor, five council members, four police officers, and one clerk.¹⁰ The town had its own news letter, call the Bibb Recorder, which proclaimed that, "In Bibb City there are clean, attractive and well-kept homes with modern conveniences, well-kept lawns and other appointments to spur the ambition and pride of the people of Bibb City."¹¹ Minnie Clyde and Webster came to the mill after workers had been approached to form a union. In a 1933 Bibb Recorder, President William D. Anderson explained that the rights of workers under the law entitled employees to be free to join a union, but that it was not necessary at the Bibb Manufacturing Company.¹² In another edition of the Bibb Recorder it was stated, "Bibb City local employees say agitators won't be aided and that people are too busy to bother attending labor meetings and have no interest in trouble makers."¹³ During their working career at the mill, the Balkcoms were never approached to join a union because it simply was not tolerated.¹⁴

Once employed with the mill, the Balkcoms took up residence on Park Avenue in Bibb City. They were charged 50 cents a room per week in this two-room house located at what is now referred to as "the old village." The mill provided any maintenance needed for their houses including a routine painting every three years. Bibb required the residents to keep their property clean. During their early years in Bibb City, the Balkcoms never felt the need to lock the doors to their house.¹⁵

Webster began his employment in maintenance, working from 7:00 p.m. until 7:00 a.m., and Minnie Clyde started as a battery filler, working from 7:00 a.m. until 3:00 p.m. The battery was a container that held a spool of yarn. As the cloth was woven by the machinery, Minnie Clyde kept the battery filled with yarn. She tied the loose end of an old spool to a new spool of yarn. This enabled the machine to continuously make the cloth without interruption.¹⁶

At first, they didn't have a maid and because of their shift differences, life was little more than bearable. Once the Balkcoms were able to employ a maid, things became more manageable at home. With one exception, each maid employed by the family was an African-American. Webster continued to work the night shift for fourteen years. His only break in his service with the mill was during World War

II when he went to Panama City, Florida to work in the shipyards. Minnie Clyde and their second child, Gloria, accompanied him immediately while Yvonne stayed with relatives until she finished the school term in Bibb City. A significantly higher salary was the lure to the shipyards for Webster. The family remained in Panama City for more than two years while living in government housing. Once the war was over, the Balkcoms returned to Bibb City and the mill. Webster and Minnie Clyde had no difficulty resuming their employment because they were already trained workers.¹⁷

During shifts at the mill, workers were permitted to take a short lunch break. Many employees brought their lunches from home. If you forgot your lunch, you had an opportunity to purchase it from the "dope wagon." This was a food and drink cart which began its rounds between 10:30 a.m. and 11:00 a.m.¹⁸ The Wagon's name originated from the slang word "dope" which was used to refer to Coca Cola. This was because the original formula for Coca Cola included a small trace of cocaine.¹⁹

All the children of the employees attended the Bibb City School. It educated children from kindergarten until the eighth grade. Once the children reached the secondary school level, they went to schools in Columbus assigned by the Muscogee County School District. The Balkcom's oldest daughter, Yvonne, attended the Bibb City School from 1940 to 1948 and graduated from Baker High School in June of 1952. The other children, Gloria and Ronald, attended Jordan Vocational High School.²⁰ Gloria graduated from high school in 1959 and Ronald graduated in 1962. The song of the Bibb City School was, "Bibb City Goes Rolling Along" which was to the tune of "The Caissons." James H. Porter, first vice-president of the mill, left a large sum of money to the community.²¹ This money enabled each student, during Christmas, to receive a gift basket of fruit and a present from the mill. To teach the importance of cleanliness, periodically the school would sponsor clean up campaigns. A committee of Bibb City residents, on a volunteer basis, would inspect the housing areas and announce those addresses, which needed improvement. The announcement was made only in school because of its intent to teach the children to have pride in their community.

In 1936, the Bibb City school was one of the largest in Muscogee County with about fifteen teachers. The county and state, through the county school officials, would pay the teacher's salaries in accordance with prevailing county rates. School was held in a modern brick building which was provided by the Bibb Manufacturing company.²² According to Minnie Clyde, the area high school enjoyed receiving students from Bibb City because the children were very disciplined. In addition, the transition to Columbus schools was an easy one for her children.²³

Bibb City had its own church called Porter Memorial Church, which was named after James H. Porter. Sunday school attendance was important and the paper often reported the numbers. The Bibb Recorder frequently reported how many were present in Sunday school for all the Bibb villages.²⁴

Sunday school attendance was important for the Bibb Girl Reserves. The Balkcom's oldest daughter, Yvonne, was an active member. Money contributed from John H. Porter enabled the girl's organization to take numerous trips with all expenses paid. Parents were only required to provide their daughters with spending money for souvenirs. Membership in the Bibb Girl's Reserve enabled the daughters of employees to travel outside Bibb City to the ocean, the state capital, and to our nation's capital.²⁵ There were also activities for the entire family at Bibb City. There were baseball teams, softball teams and a bowling alley. In June of 1929, the Bibb City pool opened for the first time.²⁶ Once, the Columbus Chamber of Commerce sponsored a beauty pageant which was open to Bibb City female residents and Minnie Clyde won third place. Her award was a season pass to the Bibb City pool. The pool was later closed in 1964.²⁷

The mill originally owned everything except for a few stores in the village. This changed in 1964, when the houses were sold. The resident of a house had first option to buy, with the second option going to other Bibb mill employees.²⁸ Minnie Clyde remembers the mill facing the reality of the civil rights movement during this time. The mill was going to be forced to hire more African-American employees. It was not merely for economic reasons that the mill offered their houses to employees. According to Minnie Clyde, the mill sought to avoid any racial problems by allowing their white employees buy the houses.²⁹ Minnie Clyde and Webster purchased their home on First Avenue in Bibb City that same year. Due to a heart condition, Webster became disabled and was forced to resign his supervisory position at the mill in 1969. He died of a heart attack in 1978. Minnie Clyde, who retired in 1971, still lives in their home on what was once called "supervisor's row."³⁰

After her retirement, Minnie Clyde remained active in the Bibb City community. In April of 1995, a vacancy became available on the city council and the council voted her as the replacement. The elected officials of Bibb City consisted of a mayor and five council members. The 1998 mayor was Steve Gray and the council members were Thomas L. Bailey, James Floyd, J. T. Givens, Ronald Golden, and Johnny McNeil.³¹

In recent years, the mill failed to prosper as it did when the Balkcoms first arrived. In 1997, the mill reported a $28.3 million loss in profits with $24 million of that total from the fourth quarter. The efforts to sell the Bibb Manufacturing Company's operations in Bibb City were unsuccessful. The mill closed on March 20, 1998. Bibb's chief financial officer, Chuck Tutterow, said the company intended to market their holdings in Bibb City immediately.³²

Although Minnie Clyde's term on the council ended January 1, 1998, she remained a member of Bibb City's planning committee. The committee believed the city's location and beautiful surrounding along the Chattahoochee River were its best assets.³³ In recent years, the river-front property in Bibb City emerged as a commodity among real estate investors in Columbus. Some homeowners were said to have standing offers for their houses.³⁴ In spite of all the changes and the uncertain outlook, Minnie Clyde Balkcom remained optimistic about the community's future.

Editor's Note: As Carolyn Smith indicates when the Bibb Mill ended its existence on March 20, 1998, an era also ended for Bibb City. The city's major source of tax revenue for its annual budget of more than $300,000 vanished. By the year 2000 the Bibb City Council faced a $120,000 deficit and $70,000 in bank debt. Out of money and with no expected revenue the little city could not provide necessary services for its 600 residents. The only option was merger with Columbus Consolidated Government. The Bibb City Council took this painful decision on December 7, 2000, voting to dissolve its charter as an independent city. On December 12, Bibb City Mayor, Tom Bailey and Economic Director Jerry Evans asked Columbus Council to take over the mill village's public services as of January 1, 2001. The General Assembly of Georgia also had to act to complete the legal process of liquidating Bibb City. HENRY LEWIS BENNING OF COLUMBUS

by

Craig Lloyd

J. David Dameron, General Henry Lewis Benning: "This Was a Man": A Biography of Georgia's Supreme Court Justice and Confederate General. Athens, GA: Iberian Publishing Co., 2001. Pp. 404. Illustrations, appendices, bibliography. $29.95 paper. ISBN 0-93593180-5.

Columbusite Henry Lewis Benning (1814-1875) ranks as one of the most significant men of Georgia of his era. In 1849 he emerged as one of the first Georgians, indeed one of the first southerners, to advocate openly the cause of state secession as a means of protecting slavery. A Georgia Supreme Court Justice in the 1850s, his rulings, especially in Padelford v. Savannah (1854), affirmed the "strict constructionist" interpretation of the U. S. constitution, denying to the Federal government virtually any power over the states and asserting the equality of state supreme courts with the U. S. Supreme Court. A zealous activist in 1860-61 in securing Georgia's secession from the Union, Benning then took up arms for the Confederacy. He organized the Georgia 17th Infantry Regiment and rose from its colonel to the rank of Brigadier General, commanding a brigade in General James Longstreet's corps. A daring commander he led his forces in virtually all the major battles in the northern Virginia theater and figured significantly in the struggles at Gettysburg and Chickamauga. He was wounded on several occasions and had three horses on which he was mounted killed beneath him during these terrible fights.

J. David Dameron deserves high praise for undertaking an exhaustive research, enabling him to produce the most definitive study of Benning to date. He garnered information from Benning's numerous living descendents not only in Columbus but from those scattered across the United States. He found primary sources in special collections at the University of North Carolina, the University of Georgia (especially its files containing Benning's lifelong correspondence with Howell Cobb), Columbus State University, Duke University, the National Archives and the Library of Congress. To deepen his understanding of the Civil War campaigns in which Benning participated, he read soldier's diaries and the indispensable source for such research, the 127 volumes of documents in The War of Rebellion Records compiled by the U. S. War Department between 1880 and 1901.

Dameron begins by tracing Benning's ancestry to French Huguenots Francois Benin and his wife Ann de Bonette who emigrated to Colonial Virginia in 1700. By the second generation the name had become Benning and the family had moved to Georgia. Francois' grandson Pleasant Moon (not an Indian name) Benning married Malinda White in 1809; their first surviving child was Henry Lewis born on April 2, 1814. His parents were able to secure their son a fine secondary school education at Mt. Zion Academy in Hancock county and in 1831 Henry matriculated to Franklin College in Athens (the forerunner of UGA). An earnest student, active in the Phi Kappa {Literary} Society, Benning graduated first in his class, a group that included other future leaders such as Howell Cobb and Herschel V. Johnson.

During Benning's collegiate years, his father moved the family to a plantation in Harris County, which he had won in the land lottery of 1832. Upon graduation in 1834, Henry came home to his parents to study law under George W. Towns of Talbotton, Georgia. Towns would become a significant influence. In addition to the legal training, Benning absorbed Towns' states' rights political ideology. The Benning family had owned slaves from the first generation in Virginia; Henry had known a warm personal relationship with his mammy, Queen (as he would later with Old Billie, the slave who served him personally in peace and war until his master's death). Thus from his formative years, Henry Lewis cherished the institution of slavery and embraced the states' rights philosophy securing it.

Using Benning's correspondence with Howell Cobb, Dameron reveals his subject as an ambitious young man who aspired to rise above the yeoman and somewhat rustic status of his parents to become a full fledged member of the southern elite, the educated, wealthy planter with his ties to the law, trade, and above all politics. When Towns' moved to Columbus, Benning went with him in joint legal practice. Here Benning helped found a subscription library as a member of the local Literary Society. He also served briefly as an aide to General Winfield Scott during the Creek War of 1836. After this service, he was appointed Solicitor-General of the Chattahoochee Circuit, a position which required him to prosecute state legal cases from Chattahoochee northward to Carroll and DeKalb Counties. It was, however, the twenty-five-year-old Benning's marriage to Mary Howard Jones in September, 1839, that enabled him to realize most of his ambitions.

Born and raised in Milledgeville, Mary was a pretty, petite southern belle whose father was the illustrious Colonel Seaborn Jones. He had served in the Georgia Militia, as Secretary of State of Georgia, and as an aide to Governor Troup in the effort to resolve land disputes between settlers and Creek Indians in west central Georgia. Jones also served three terms in the U. S. House of Representatives. In 1828, he settled in the recently created Muscogee County. Within a few years, he would own extensive plantation lands there, a grist mill on the Chattahoochee (City Mills), and a toll bridge and ferry business on the River. The remarkable enterpriser would also co-own with his neighbor, Van Leonard, the city water service, provided by springs on the latter's land in Wildwood which was piped downtown. In the early 1830s, Jones built his stately mansion El Dorado (since the 1870s, St. Elmo). It was here that Benning and Mary were married, conceived their 10 children (5 of whom survived to adulthood), and where Benning practiced law in partnership with his father-in-law. Seaborn Jones owned many slaves and was an ardent advocate, Dameron notes, "for state supremacy in matters conflicting with the Federal Supreme Court," thus re-enforcing Benning's commitment to the same doctrine. While practicing law with Jones, Benning bought his own lands (and the slaves to tend them) north of Columbus.

In Columbus, the young Benning couple attended St. Luke Methodist Church and Mary was one of the founders in 1840 of the orphanage, which over time would become the Elizabeth Ann Shepherd Home. While pursuing his legal career, Benning followed Georgia and national politics closely in the 1840s. His letters to Howell Cobb, Dameron observes, indicate a bit of jealousy over Cobb's success in being elected to the U. S. House of Representatives in 1842 and some frustration over Cobb's failure to answer his requests for inside information about political intriguing in Washington. With the end of the Mexican War in 1848 and the jolting re-emergence of the slavery question—who would settle the newly conquered lands, slave owners or free soilers?—Benning staked out a position much more radical than most other southern politicians including Cobb were willing to risk for another decade: the right of slave states to secede if slavery were not permitted to expand to the lands taken by the U. S. from Mexico.

Thus Benning was one of two Georgia delegates at the failed secessionist convention in Louisville in 1849 and Nashville in 1850 and opposed the Compromise of 1850, allowing, among other things, California to enter the Union as a free state.

The political crises of the 1850s would bring southern politicians around to Benning's point of view and Dameron thus sees his subject as a visionary. The author sympathizes with the positions taken by Benning during these crises, finding them the "logical" conclusions of a "jurist"—even when Benning had the facts wrong. Benning believed, and Dameron does not demur, that the Compromise of 1850 made slavery legal in southern portions of all of the western territories, when in fact it was legal only in the southern portion of the land bought from France in 1803, the Louisiana Territory; that Republican Party members were known generally as "Black Republicans," when in fact they were called that only by their foes; that Abraham Lincoln and virtually all Republicans were abolitionists in 1860, when in fact Lincoln and most his party's faithful then denounced abolitionism. Dameron errs in stating that in the 1857 Dred Scott Case the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that settlers in the territories could dispose of the question of slavery. To the contrary, the ruling guaranteed slavery's legality there even if a majority opposed it.

While weak on the politics of the 1850s, Dameron is back on solid ground in his handling of the military history of the Civil War in which his subject figured so prominently. As a former professional soldier himself, the author is excellent in vividly portraying the horrors of the battlefield and the privations and hardships of camp life in sweltering summer heat, flooding rains and winter cold and snow. True to his convictions and southern gentleman's code of honor, Benning bore the brunt of battle bravely for the duration earning the heartfelt admiration of his soldiers who bestowed on him the sobriquet "Old Rock." At the Battle of Gettysburg on the second day, Benning's brigade penetrated into Union lines further than any other Confederate unit and actually captured several artillery pieces—the author speculated that these may have been the only ones taken on Union soil. In spite of the fact that his brigade had shrunk of one-fourth of its strength at the outset of the war, the survivors at Appomattox wanted Benning to ignore General Lee's surrender order of April 9, 1865—so high did their morale remain.

The war took a terrible toll on the Benning-Jones household. Henry and Mary's son, Seaborn, was severely wounded twice and suffered intermittent blindness for the rest of his short life. Mary's brother, John A. Jones, was killed at Gettysburg and, perhaps reacting to this loss, her father died early in 1864.

Dameron is very good in describing the dismantling of the antebellum southern culture and economy wrought by military defeat. Loss of slaves and other investments and the general breakdown of law and order forced Benning and his daughters to move from El Dorado to a white wood frame home at the corner of 14th Street and Broad where Henry returned to his legal practice. During the war, Mary had run the various family businesses, made three trips to Virginia and back bringing the wounded Seaborn and later her husband home into her care, volunteered with the Columbus Ladies Aid Society, and cared for her young daughters. Exhausted, still grieving the loss of her brother and father, and traumatized by the prospect of leaving El Dorado, she died at the age of 51 in June 1868. (In the course of his research, the author found a 1925 article that Margaret Mitchell had written about the Benning family and he speculates that elements of Mary's travail may have gone into the shaping later of the fictional Scarlett O'Hara). Never married, Seaborn Benning died of his war wounds in 1874. His father stoically lawyered on supporting his daughters, defended those accused in the Ashburn murder case, and in the 1870s gave up the thought of returning to state politics. After working all night to present a case the next day, he suffered a stroke while walking to the Courthouse from his home. Two days later he died. His funeral procession and memorial service at Linwood Cemetery were attended by large crowds of saddened state political leaders and local citizens.

Dameron's book is a must read for local historians interested in Columbus' antebellum past. The author does a good job of fleshing out the town's corps of important lawyers and controversial bank failures which divided it. Genealogist will appreciate his careful work on the Benning family and the many others connected to it by marriage. The book contains a section of nicely reproduced portraits of the Benning-Joneses and related family members. Appendices include genealogical charts and lists giving information on each of the men who served in the Benning brigade. The author has sketched his own maps showing the disposition of the brigade during its many battles. Anyone interested in the story of a remarkable man and his family caught up in the riptides of secession, war, and reconstruction will enjoy this book.

MEMBERSHIP LIST OF BETHEL BAPTIST CHURCH - MUSCOGEE COUNTY, GEORGIA

Transcribed by Stephen P. Barber

In 1860, the members of Bethel Baptist Church appointed a committee to examine the church books and to make a record of all members past and present. In August of that year the committee presented its findings and published a list in the church record book. In subsequent years, the list was used to record the transactions of the members, such as deaths, marriages, and transfers of membership.

The records have been transcribed as they appear in the record book, with the exception of dates, which are transcribed using standard three letter month abbreviations.

Explanation of abbreviations

By Exper = The person made a profession of faith and was baptized.

By Let = The person transferred his or her membership from or to another Baptist church.

By Excommunication - The person was excommunicated or excluded from church membership due to some unacceptable behavior.

RESEARCH NOTE: NAME CHANGES

An interesting web site has come to the editor's attention regarding name changes in Georgia:

<http://moses.westberry.com/moses/files/namechanges.pdf> Several Muscogee County names appear in a file entitled "Names Legally Changed in Georgia, 1800-1856, by Acts of the General Assembly."

(After 1856, name changes were handled by county courts.) The file provides an alphabetical listing of names "changed to" with "names changed from" along with the county of residence and date of the Act.

Usually a name was changed to legitimate an illegitimate child or for inheritance purposes. Footnotes by some names give other details. One unusual note: "2. Free white person of no name sold to Robert Beasley."

BOOK NOTES

Jesse McKinney, Memoirs of a Mill Town. Columbus, GA: Brentwood Academic Press, 1998. Pp. 77. Photographs, map. $12.00. ISBN 1-55630-828-0. Second printing. Available from the author at: 5218 Ray Drive, Columbus, GA 31904.

An informal and affectionate but informed remembrance of life in Bibb City from the 1940s to the mid-1960s. The book captures an important segment of local history and is highly recommended for all collections of Columbus and Muscogee County history.

Kenneth H. Thomas, Jr., Columbus, Georgia, in Vintage Postcards. Charleston, SC: Arcadia Publishing Co., 2001. $19.99. ISBN 0-7385-0698-2. Available at local bookstores.

The book contains over 200 postcards of Columbus and Fort Benning dating from 1905 to 1950. On October 21, 2001, at 2:00 p.m., the Columbus Museum will open an exhibit of the author's postcards and Thomas will present a slide lecture and autograph copies of his book.

Vol. 12, No. 1 (Spring 2001), page 41: Charles, Julia and Julian Turner are the children of Thomas B. and Annie Leonard Turner, not Thomas B. and Annie Dixon (Holt) Turner.

RIVERDALE CEMETERY RECORDS
COLUMBUS, GEORGIA

NOTE: This extract, third of a series, is copied from a record made in 1945 by the LDS Church for its Genealogical Society, Salt Lake City, Utah (Catalog No. 8740143, Microfilm: GA c11b). One of four public cemeteries in Columbus, Riverdale Cemetery originated in 1890. This index included burials through 1943. No attempt to confirm name spelling or dates has been made by this journal. Researchers may wish to authenticate the information by viewing the records at the Sexton's Office; call (706) 653-4579 for directions and hours.
